Cover Letters Still Play Valuable Role in Hiring Decisions

As the job application process increasingly moves online, some job seekers might be tempted to think a formal cover letter is no longer necessary – not so, a new survey shows. Eighty-six percent of executives polled said cover letters are valuable when evaluating job candidates. Moreover, eight out of 10 managers said it is common to receive electronic resumes accompanied by cover letters.

The study was conducted by an independent research firm and developed by OfficeTeam, a leading staffing service specializing in the placement of highly skilled administrative professionals. The survey is based on telephone interviews with 150 senior executives from the largest companies in the United States.

“Submitting a resume without a cover letter is like not shaking hands when meeting someone for the first time,” Said Dave Willmer, executive director of OfficeTeam. “Those who aren’t including cover letters with their resume are missing an opportunity to make a good first impression and set themselves apart from other job applicants.” Willmer added, “A cover letter should demonstrate the applicant’s knowledge of the company, highlight applicable skills and work experience, and explain any resume anomalies, such as extended employment gaps.”
